

We followed Route 28 North, first to Sharpsburg...

Then to Springdale to see the Rachel Carson Homestead...

Then to Saxonburg to see the museum dedicated to John Roebling, then to Natrona Heights.

We got onto Route
28 by crossing
through downtown...

Getting onto the Veterans Bridge and driving over the Allegheny River, the river that parallels Route 28.

We were delighted to discover that Sharpsburg has a statue of Guyasuta and that he was wearing a mask.

Guyasuta, as I'm sure you know, was a Seneca leader who played an important role in 18th C diplomacy and warfare. Here he is with George Washington, whom he guided through Western Pa., in the Mt. Washington statue Point of View.

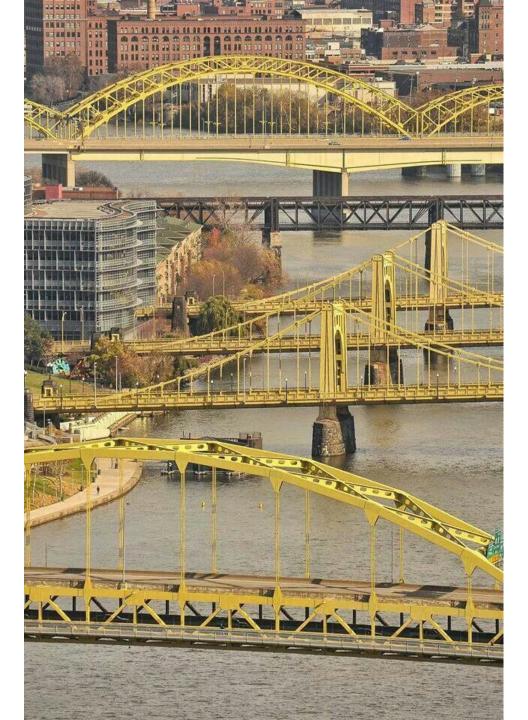

When one thinks of pools and patios, one always thinks of elephants, right? (Also, note the Greek lettering on the building. It just all fits.)

This is the childhood home of Rachel Carson, noted marine biologist, whose book Silent Spring ignited the global environmental movement.

The three middle bridges here—called Pittsburgh's "Sisters Bridges"—are the only trio of nearly identical bridges in the U.S. They are named after Roberto Clemente (the closest of the three, on Sixth Street), Andy Warhol (Seventh Street) and Rachel Carson (Ninth Street).

Then we drove a little north of Route 28 to see Saxonburg, the town founded by John Roebling and his brother, Carl. Roebling, you may know, was a civil engineer, who went on to build bridges, including two in Pittsburgh and the famed Brooklyn Bridge.

The famed Brooklyn Bridge.

And the tiny replica at the Saxonburg Museum. Soooo cute!

Our next stop was Natrona Bottling, the last manufacturer in Allegheny County of soda bottled in glass bottles.

They make Red Ribbon Soda, I love Red Ribbon Cherry Soda. The factory was a dump, though. If they hired me, I'd turn it into a destination, with a brewery and a restaurant.

Also, every tree was in bloom everywhere we went.

Our final stop was the Just Good Donut
Shop in the Southside.
They were out of everything but these.

Our trip took a total of 2 ½ hours and we never got out of the car.
